Background to the 1777 Campaign:

The Philadelphia campaign of 1777 began when Vice Admiral Lord Richard Howe brought the British fleet to the Head of Elk (present day Elkton, MD) in late August. His brother, General Sir William Howe, landed the British army and began his march north toward the then American Capital of Philadelphia. General Howe's goal was to bring George Washington and his army to battle by forcing him to defend the rebel capital and the Congress then meeting there. Howe hoped to destroy the main army under Washington, capture or disperse the Congress, and bring an end the rebellion in the colonies once and for all.
